IN-HOUSE AND CORPORATE COUNSEL SUMMARY

French law is globally known to be one of the most arbitration-friendly in the world. Several important factors were brought together so that Paris can be perceived today as one of the safest and most convenient seats of arbitration. Nowadays, some of the most renowned arbitration practitioners in the world and arbitral institutions have set up offices in Paris.

France is one of the oldest homes of the civil law system. Most of the rules applicable to arbitration are set forth in the Code of Civil Procedure ("CCP"). The French arbitration law distinguishes between rules applicable to domestic and international arbitration even though some provisions are applicable to both by virtue of Article 1506 CCP. Pursuant to Article 1504 CCP, arbitration is considered to be "international" when the interests of international trade are at stake. The distinction is important, as rules applicable to international arbitration are more liberal.

| Key places of arbitration in the jurisdiction? | Paris holds a strong reputation as being the capital of international arbitration with the support of French arbitration law, which is well-known as one of, if not the most, arbitration-friendly in the world. As such, it is a home to leading arbitral institutions and prominent practitioners. |
| Civil law / Common law environment? (if mixed or other, specify) | France is a civil law system, but many arbitrations seated in Paris are subject to foreign laws such as Swiss or English law. Arbitral practitioners, including arbitrators, are familiar with general common law concepts. |
| Confidentiality of arbitrations? | Domestic arbitration: pursuant to Article 1464 CCP, arbitration is confidential unless otherwise agreed upon by the parties. The scope of confidentiality is not defined but it is considered to extend to the names of the arbitrators, the arbitral institution, the legal counsel, and the seat. In addition, Article 1479 CCP provides that members of the arbitral tribunal must keep their deliberations secret.
International arbitration: no French legal provision provides for a general rule of confidentiality of international arbitration. In order to secure confidentiality, parties can, inter alia, enter into a separate confidentiality agreement, provide for confidentiality in their arbitration agreement or choose an institution whose rules expressly state that the arbitral proceedings are confidential. Yet, the deliberations of the tribunal must be kept confidential as Article 1479 CCP also applies to international arbitration. |
| Requirement to retain (local) counsel? | There is no formal requirement to retain a local counsel for the arbitration itself. However, should the need arise to request a French state judge to decide on certain arbitration-related issues (such as for instance the constitution of the arbitral tribunal or emergency injunctive relief), retaining a local counsel would be required. |
| Ability to present party employee witness testimony? | Pursuant to Article 1467 CCP applicable to domestic arbitration and extended to international arbitration, the arbitral tribunal may hear any person to provide testimony. Witnesses are generally not |

<th>Ability to hold meetings and/or hearings outside of the seat and/or remotely?</th>
<th>French law does not contain any specific provision requiring that meetings and/or hearings must be held at the seat of the arbitration. In a general manner, pursuant to Article 1464 CCP (domestic arbitration) and Article 1509 CCP (international arbitration), proceedings are governed by the rules contained in the arbitration agreement itself or by the institutional rules that the arbitration agreement refers to but they have to be conducted in accordance with essential procedural principles of French law (such as notably due process). If the arbitration agreement and/or designated institutional rules are silent on a specific point, the arbitral tribunal has discretion to decide on such point. Therefore and unless otherwise provided by the parties, there is no obstacle under French law that the meetings and/or hearings be held outside of the seat or remotely, notably when the arbitration rules agreed to by the parties provide for such possibility, as long as the essential procedural principles are complied with.</th>

Under French law, contingency fee arrangements where the entirety of attorney’s remuneration is dependent on the outcome of the case (quota litis pacts) are prohibited. However, the Paris Court of Appeal held that such “pure” success fee arrangements in international arbitration procedures are not contrary to the French definition of international public policy if the agreed fees are not manifestly excessive. ARBITRATION PRACTITIONER SUMMARY

France has one of the most advanced and liberal arbitration frameworks in the world. Arbitration practitioners have thus wide discretion to adapt the arbitral proceedings. The State courts widely support arbitration and systematically give priority to the arbitrators to rule upon their jurisdiction. Overall, unless the arbitration agreement is held to be manifestly void or manifestly inapplicable, which is extremely rare, the State courts systematically decide that they lack jurisdiction when they are confronted with a dispute that appears to arise from an arbitration agreement. Likewise, the grounds allowing a party to (i) set aside an award rendered in France in an international arbitration or to (ii) challenge the exequatur orders allowing enforcement of foreign awards in France are very limited and actions initiated on such grounds are dismissed in the vast majority of cases. Finally, the enforcement of foreign arbitral awards is highly effective, notably because State judges make only a limited review of the award while deciding whether an enforcement order (exequatur) should be granted and given that a foreign award set aside at the seat can still be enforced in France.

| Date of arbitration law? | The rules applicable to domestic and international arbitration were compiled in the second part of the 20th century and result from a decree of 14 May 1980 on domestic arbitration and a decree of 12 May 1981 on international arbitration. A decree of 13 January 2011 reformed the current rules on both domestic and international arbitration, embodied in Articles 1442 to 1503 CCP (domestic arbitration) and 1504 to 1527 CCP (international arbitration). |
| UNCITRAL Model Law? If so, any key changes thereto? 2006 version? | The French arbitration law had existed long before the UNCITRAL Model Law was created and implemented in numerous countries. Although both systems adopt a liberal approach to international arbitration, the French system seems even more liberal than the UNCITRAL Model Law. By way of example, French arbitration law does not require the international arbitration agreement to be in writing whereas the UNCITRAL Model Law does. In addition, the enforcement of a foreign award cannot be refused on the ground that the award was set aside at the seat of arbitration. |
| Availability of specialised courts or judges at the key seat(s) in the jurisdiction for handling arbitration-related matters? | With regards to both domestic and international arbitration, the decree of 13 January 2011 created a dedicated judge (juge d'appui) who has jurisdiction over arbitration-related issues and who acts in support of arbitral proceedings. Such judge may assist the parties in the constitution of the arbitral tribunal if any problem arises, especially in ad hoc proceedings, as his role is limited in proceedings governed by institutional rules. In addition, the Paris Court of Appeal has recently created a dedicated international chamber exclusively focused on appeals against first-instance decisions in cross-border commercial matters and some other specific matters such as annulment proceedings against international arbitral awards rendered in Paris and challenges against the enforcement orders (these cases were previously heard before Section 1, Chamber 1 of the Court) in order to ensure coherent case law. Similarly, the French Cour de cassation – the highest judicial authority in annulment proceedings in France – systematically assigns such proceedings to its first civil division. |
Given the number of arbitral proceedings seated in France and the arbitration-friendly approach adopted by French lawmakers, judges dealing with arbitration-related matters are generally used to arbitration and they are familiar with the applicable rules.

The judgments where State courts considered that the arbitration agreement was manifestly void or manifestly inapplicable are extremely rare as this concept is construed very narrowly.</td>

<tr>
<th>Do annulment proceedings typically suspend enforcement proceedings?</th>
</tr>
</thead>
| Under Article 1526 CCP, neither (i) an action for annulment against an award nor (ii) an appeal against an order granting exequatur automatically suspend enforcement proceedings. However, a party may request suspension and/or adaptation of enforcement by filing a petition to the First Chairman of the Court of Appeal or the judge in charge of managing the proceedings ("conseiller de la mise en état"), once such judge is appointed by the Court of Appeal. In order to succeed, the applicant must demonstrate that enforcement is likely to lead to "manifestly excessive consequences” (e.g. enforcement can lead to debtor’s insolvency; serious risk of non-recovery of funds in case the award is annulled and/or the order granting exequatur is reversed, etc.).

Courts’ attitude towards the recognition and enforcement of foreign awards annulled at the seat of the arbitration?

Contrary to the vast majority of other jurisdictions, the annulment of the arbitral award at the seat of arbitration is neither a ground nor even a significant factor to prevent such award from being recognised or enforced in France. Indeed, French arbitration law considers that the award is not attached to the seat of arbitration but rather forms part of an “arbitral legal order” distinct from State jurisdictions’ legal orders, and that its annulment at the seat has no impact on its validity.

If an arbitral tribunal were to order a hearing to be conducted remotely (in whole or in part) despite a party’s objection, would such an order affect the recognition or enforceability of an ensuing award in the jurisdiction?

Articles 1464 CCP (applicable to domestic arbitration) and 1509 CCP (applicable to international arbitration) grant the arbitral tribunal wide discretion to conduct the proceedings in the manner it deems appropriate as long as it complies with the procedural rules specified by the parties in their arbitration agreement and/or the designated institutional rules.

However, while taking procedural measures, such as ordering a remote hearing, the arbitral tribunal shall always ensure that essential procedural rights of the objecting party are complied with (adversarial proceedings, right to be heard and to present defence, etc.). If a remote hearing does not infringe any party's essential procedural rights, the tribunal's order should not affect the recognition or enforceability of the future award.

Key points to note in relation to arbitration with and enforcement of awards against public bodies at the jurisdiction?

Under Article 2060 of the Civil Code, French public entities cannot, in principle, validly agree to arbitration. However, some types of public bodies can be authorised to do so by way of a State decree. However, the French Cour de cassation considers that Article 2060 does not apply to international arbitration.

Specific rules regarding enforcement measures against public bodies are provided under Articles L. 111-1-1 to L. 111-1-1-3 of the Code of Civil Enforcement Proceedings. Article L. 111-1-1 requires judge's prior authorisation in order to perform enforcement measures against public bodies. Article L. 111-1-2 of the same Code lists three criteria, one of which at least must be complied with so that the judge can issue such an authorisation. Finally, Article L. 111-1-3 reinforces the immunity of diplomatic property by requiring a “special and express” waiver to implement an enforcement measure against such type of property.

Is the validity of blockchain-based evidence recognised?

There is no specific provision under French law regarding the validity of blockchain-based evidence. Indeed, the French legislator seems to consider that there is no need to create a new category of evidence as the legality of blockchain-based evidence can be assessed by French judges by considering the existing general rules of evidence. The mere fact that the evidence is blockchain-based

2 https://questions.assemblee-nationale.fr/q15/15-22103QE.htm
will not automatically result in discarding it. Indeed, in commercial matters (and more generally in almost all civil matters), the principle is to admit all type of evidence.

| Where an arbitration agreement and/or award is recorded on a blockchain, is it recognised as valid? | As regards international arbitration, French law does not require that an arbitration agreement be in “writing” whereas such requirement exists with respect to domestic arbitration. It thus seems that as long as a party can prove the existence of an arbitration agreement, be it through blockchain-based evidence, its existence is likely to be recognised in case of an international arbitration. With respect to domestic arbitration, the French judge is likely to analyse whether the use of blockchain can amount to a valid electronic signature.

Likewise, Article 1480 CCP (applicable to domestic arbitration) and Article 1513 CCP (applicable to international arbitration) both require that the award be signed by the arbitrators. In order to assess whether the award is validly signed, the French judge is thus likely to analyse whether the use of blockchain can amount to a valid electronic “signature”.

| Would a court consider a blockchain arbitration agreement and/or award as originals for the purposes of recognition and enforcement? | Article 1515 CCP is less stringent than Article IV of the New York Convention as it does not require production of the “duly authenticated” original copy of the award for the purposes of recognition and enforcement. Applicant needs to merely present the original award and the original arbitration agreement (or duly certified copies). As French law does not require any particular form for the original of the award and/or the arbitration agreement, it appears that a French court could accept a blockchain arbitration agreement and/or award for the purposes of recognition and enforcement as long as the applicant manages to establish that the submitted documents are originals.

| Other key points to note? | An international arbitral award can only be enforced in France if it is rendered effective by an enforcement order called “exequatur”. This procedure is non-adversarial and only allows the French judge for a limited control. Indeed, the judge is solely requested to verify if the award whose enforcement is sought does exist and whether it is not manifestly contrary to the French definition of international public policy. The cases where French judges refuse to grant an exequatur are very rare. |
JURISDICTION DETAILED ANALYSIS

1. The legal framework of the jurisdiction

1.1 The relation between French arbitration law and the UNCITRAL Model Law

French arbitration law is not based on the UNCITRAL Model Law. However, many provisions of French arbitration law comply with the Model Law as both systems adopt a very liberal and arbitration-friendly approach. Yet, French arbitration law is generally considered to be even more liberal than the Model Law as, inter alia, it does not require, with regards to international arbitration that the arbitration agreement be in writing. Moreover, the annulment of the award at the seat of arbitration is not a ground, under French arbitration law, for refusing its enforcement or recognition, which is the case under the Model Law.

1.2 The form of the French arbitration law

French arbitration law was initially codified in the decree No 80-354 of 14 May 1980 on domestic arbitration and the decree No 81-500 of 12 May 1981 on international arbitration. Such rules were subsequently revised by the decree No 2011-48 of 13 January 2011, which came into force on 1 May 2011. The currently-applicable rules, as amended by the 2011 decree, are mainly provided in Book IV of the CCP. Articles 1442 to 1503 CCP apply to domestic arbitration while Articles 1504 to 1527 CCP apply to international arbitration. It should, however, be noted that the application of numerous provisions concerning domestic arbitration is extended to international arbitration by virtue of a reference made by Article 1506 CCP.

Rules applicable to domestic arbitration differ from those that apply to international arbitration. Whether an arbitral proceeding is deemed international will carry significant consequences in terms of applicable rules as domestic arbitration is subject to stricter rules than international one.

Pursuant to Article 1504 CCP, an arbitration will be deemed international if it affects the “interests of international trade”. French courts have consistently applied this definition in an extensive and pragmatic manner and consider that a dispute is international when it concerns the economy of more than one country. This means that any dispute where goods, funds, technologies, services, etc. are exchanged over a national border, at least once, will meet this standard. The international nature of a dispute is not determined on the grounds of the nationality of the parties, or the law governing the merits of the dispute. For instance, an arbitration proceeding involving French parties, with French law applicable to the merits of the case, has been deemed international merely because the dispute was related to a contract which was to be partially performed overseas.

Several specific provisions related to arbitration can be found outside the CCP. By example, Article L. 721-3 of the French Commercial Code deals with domestic arbitration and provides for the validity of arbitration agreements in disputes related to commercial matters. In addition, Articles 2059 to 2061 of the French Civil Code relate to the question of the arbitrability of disputes. Article 2061, in particular, has been amended by the Act No 2016-1547 of 18 November 2016 on the Modernization of Justice (La loi de modernisation de la justice du XXIe siècle) to allow non-professional parties (e.g., workers and consumers), whose contracts include an arbitration agreement, to solve a dispute arising from such agreement through domestic arbitration if they agree so. Previously, such clauses were automatically considered as null and void when applied in domestic arbitration.

Finally, a number of isolated provisions related to the capacity to submit certain specific persons to domestic arbitration or the arbitrability of certain specific matters can be found in other French codes such as Article

L. 615-17 of the French Intellectual Property Code, which authorizes arbitration of patent disputes, or Article L. 2141-5 of the French Code of Transportation which allows the French national railroad company (SNCF Mobilités) to enter into arbitration agreements.

1.3 Last major revision of French arbitration law

The last major reform of French arbitration law was brought by the Decree No 2011-48 of 13 January 2011, which came into force on 1 May 2011. Furthermore, the Law on the Modernization of Justice of 18 November 2016 extended the possibility in domestic arbitration to resort to arbitration by non-professional parties such as employees or consumers. No major reform is currently underway or expected in the near future. However, the exact content of French arbitration law is constantly being re-shaped by case law.

2. The arbitration agreement

2.1 Determination of the law governing the arbitration agreement

In domestic arbitration, the validity of an arbitration agreement is governed by Articles 1442 to 1447 CCP.

In international arbitration, the French Cour de cassation (the highest court in the French judiciary) consistently rules that the arbitration agreement is independent from all national laws - including French law - and should only be interpreted in the light of “substantive rules of international arbitration law”.

There is therefore no need to proceed to the determination of the law applicable to the arbitration agreement. The courts consider that an arbitration agreement is valid if (i) the parties have consented to arbitration and (ii) the arbitration agreement is not contrary to the French definition of international public policy. However, parties have full right to decide that a national law will apply to their arbitration agreement.5

Furthermore, the French Cour de cassation reinforced the effectivity of international arbitration agreements by consistently ruling that pursuant to a “substantive rule of international arbitration law”, an arbitration agreement is presumed to be valid.6

2.2 French court’s reaction to absence of express designation of a ‘seat’ in the arbitration agreement

The absence of express designation of a ‘seat’ in the agreement would not lead French courts to consider such agreement as invalid insofar as the designation of a seat is not required under French arbitration law.

Furthermore, French courts would not proceed to the designation of the seat themselves. Indeed, pursuant to Articles 1464 CCP (applicable to domestic arbitration) and 1509 CCP (applicable to international arbitration), the proceedings shall be conducted by the arbitral tribunal in accordance with the procedural rules agreed to by the parties. Such rules usually contain specific provisions regarding the designation of the seat by the arbitral institution or by the arbitral tribunal itself. In case the parties did not agree to any specific procedural rules, Articles 1464 and 1509 CCP give the arbitral tribunal discretion to determine the rules governing the proceedings (including the seat) as long as such rules comply with essential procedural principles of French law.

2.3 Severability of the arbitration agreement

Under French law, the arbitration agreement is considered to be completely autonomous from the underlying contract. As such, the nullity of the underlying contract will not affect the arbitration agreement itself. This principle is applicable in both international as well as domestic arbitration.

The principle of severability of the arbitration agreement was first formally recognized in international arbitration by the Cour de cassation in 1963. It has since been enshrined in Article 1447 CCP, which is applicable to both domestic and international arbitration.

2.4 Form of the arbitration agreement

In domestic arbitration, pursuant to Article 1443 CCP, the arbitration agreement must be in writing. Article 1443 CCP provides that the existence of the arbitration agreement can be proven by an exchange of documents or by a reference made in the principal contract to another document containing the agreement.

With regards to international arbitration, Article 1507 CCP provides that “the arbitration agreement is not subject to any requirements as to its form”. Therefore, the arbitration agreement does not have to be in writing and will be effective as long as the parties’ consent to arbitration can be established. In this respect, French law is even more liberal than Article II.1 of the New York Convention, which requires the arbitration agreement to be in writing. An arbitration agreement can therefore validly result from general terms and conditions to which a party has consented by way of reference. Should the existence of an arbitration agreement be contested before a State court, the party who wants to rely on such agreement bears the burden of proving its existence.

2.5 Extension of the arbitration agreement to third parties to the contract

Article 1199 of the French Civil Code provides the general principle of privity of contracts, according to which contracts are only binding upon their signatories.

However, the French courts have recognized on several occasions that the application of the arbitration agreement could be extended to third parties where (i) their consent can be found or, at least, inferred from relevant factual circumstances or where (ii) they were involved in the negotiation, performance and/or termination of the contract.

First of all, the arbitration clause may apply to non-signatories to the main contract where such non-signatories were validly assigned substantive rights and obligations arising out of the main contract. This can be for example the case in chains of contracts transferring ownership over goods. French courts also generally admit that the transmission of the arbitration agreement can be operated through the assignment of the contract in which it is contained. The courts apply the rule of severability of the arbitration agreement to the assignment of contracts. Indeed, French courts consider that in case of a voluntary assignment the arbitration agreement is transferred. As a consequence, where a contract containing an arbitration agreement is assigned, the validity of the assignment agreement will not affect the transmission of the arbitration agreement to the assignee.

Secondly, French courts have ruled that non-signatories could also be bound by the arbitration agreement in presence of a group of contracts that are related to each other. As such, while there are multiple contracts but only one of them contains an arbitration agreement, the application of such agreement may be extended to the signatories of other contracts if (i) such contracts form part of a single economic operation with the contract containing the arbitration agreement and (ii) it can be, at least, presumed that the third parties knew about the existence of the arbitration agreement. Such knowledge is often inferred from the involvement of third parties in the performance of the main contract or their implication in the underlying global economic operation. For example, the Cour de Cassation admitted that the arbitration agreement contained in the main contract was also applicable to a sub-contractor who (i) knew about the existence of the arbitration agreement and (ii) was directly involved in performance of the main contract.

Thirdly, French courts also accepted to extend the application of the arbitration clause to third parties in several cases where it was proven that such third parties (i) belonged to the same group of companies as the party who signed the contract containing the arbitration clause and (ii) directly participated in the negotiation, conclusion and/or performance of the contract. This solution was admitted for the first time by the Paris Court of Appeal in its decision concerning the motion to set aside the award in the Dow Chemical v/ Isover-Saint-Gobain case rendered under the auspices of the ICC. It was subsequently applied in several other cases.

Finally, French judges also approved the extension of the arbitration clause to third parties in some cases where a third party created an impression that it was an actual party to the agreement. For example, in the Dallah case, an arbitration agreement entered into by a trust was extended to the government of Pakistan as the latter had actually created the trust and behaved “as if the contract had been concluded by itself”.

2.6 Restrictions to arbitrability

2.6.1 Restrictions in relation to specific matters

With regards to domestic arbitration, Article 2059 of the French Civil Code provides for the general rule that “any person may submit to arbitration the rights of which he has full disposition”. As such, Article 2060 of the Civil Code excludes the possibility to submit to arbitration any matter regarding (i) the civil status or capacity of a person, (ii) relating to divorce or legal separation, (iii) involving public authorities and public entities (see para. 2.6.2 below) and (iv) generally concerning certain “matters involving public policy”.

However, the courts interpret “matters involving public policy” very restrictively and, consequently, they consider that the mere fact that a dispute involves public-policy substantive provisions of French Law does not, per se, preclude arbitration. As such, arbitral tribunals can apply the provisions of public policy and they can also sanction their violation. This is for example the case of the vast part of disputes related to competition law. Such disputes may be resolved through arbitration even though French provisions governing this matter are considered to be of public policy. However, the jurisdiction of an arbitral tribunal is limited to the civil law aspects of competition law: while an arbitral tribunal may characterise certain breaches of competition law and, as a consequence, annul a contract or award damages, it may not impose administrative fines or injunctions on parties. Such sanctions are of an administrative nature and can only be imposed by State/European authorities.

The number of restricted matters seems to be even more limited in international arbitration as the only limit to arbitrability here is “French international public policy” and this notion has been construed very narrowly. As such, parties are for example free to submit intellectual property matters to arbitration.

2.6.2 Restrictions in relation to specific persons

(i) Non-professionals

As regards domestic arbitration, before the entry into force of the Law on the Modernization of Justice in November 2016, the arbitration clause had to be concluded in the context of a professional activity. As such, arbitration clauses stipulated in contracts concluded by consumers or employees were considered null and void.

In international arbitration, French courts followed a solution adopted in 1999 by the Employment Section of the Cour de cassation which held that an arbitration clause contained in an international employment contract was not automatically void as the employee had a choice to solve his dispute against the employer either before the arbitral tribunal or before the state employment court.\(^{20}\)

As stated above, this solution was extended to domestic arbitration in November 2016 by amending Article 2061 of the Civil Code, which now reads that where a party did not contract in the context of its professional activity, it cannot be forced to resort to arbitration but it can nevertheless choose to do so.

In a recent ruling dated 30 September 2020, the Cour de cassation raised an interesting question of validity of the arbitration agreements in a consumer contract entered into between a French national and a Spanish law firm. It was decided that the provisions of the EU law that protect consumers against unfair terms prevail over the “"kompetenz-kompetenz" principle. As such, the Cour de cassation confirmed the decision of the Versailles Court of Appeal that had considered that an arbitration clause contained in an agreement for the provision of legal services was an unfair term within the meaning of the EU Council Directive 93/13/EEC of 5 April 1993 on unfair terms in consumer contracts and thus discarded it\(^{21}\). It is uncertain whether the solution adopted in this ruling is of general application as there has been no other recent decision on this point. However, it should be stressed that in order to conclude that the arbitration clause was an unfair term, the Versailles Court of Appeal heavily relied on the circumstances of the case, and the specific fact that the clause had not been subject to any negotiation and that it was standardised.\(^{22}\) As such, it would be premature to conclude, based on this single decision, that any arbitration agreement stipulated in an international consumer contract will be considered by French judges as unfair term under EU law.

(ii) State entities

As regards public State entities, the rule in domestic arbitration set forth in Article 2060 of the Civil Code is that a public entity cannot validly agree to arbitration. However, the same provision adds that some categories of public institutions of an industrial or commercial nature may be authorized to enter into arbitration agreements by a State decree.

The French Cour de cassation considers that Article 2060 does not apply to international arbitration\(^ {23}\) and rules that States are not prohibited from concluding arbitration agreements in international matters. This solution has also been extended by French courts to encompass foreign State entities, meaning that no foreign State entity can rely on a provision of its own national law in order to walk away from an arbitration agreement to which it has validly consented.\(^ {24}\)

3. Intervention of domestic courts

3.1 Will the courts stay litigation if there is a valid arbitration agreement covering the dispute?

French arbitration law gives full effect to the so-called “"kompetenz-kompetenz" principle, according to which an arbitral tribunal should be given priority to rule on its own jurisdiction.\(^ {25}\)

Article 1448 CCP (applicable to domestic arbitration and extended to international arbitration by virtue of Article 1506 CCP) provides that when a challenge to an arbitration agreement is brought before French courts, they must decline their jurisdiction if a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction is raised by defendant unless (i) the arbitral tribunal has not yet been constituted and (ii) the arbitration agreement is “manifestly null” or “manifestly inapplicable”.

It stems from Article 1448 CCP that in any event, the State court cannot rule on the jurisdiction of an arbitral tribunal where such tribunal has already been constituted. Indeed, Article 1465 CCP, applicable to both domestic and international arbitration, specifies that the arbitral tribunal has exclusive jurisdiction to rule over any challenge to its jurisdiction.

The notion of “manifestly null or manifestly inapplicable” used in Article 1448 CCP is construed extremely narrowly and the cases where State judges refuse to give priority to arbitral tribunals to rule on their own jurisdiction are extremely rare. Indeed, a French court can only rule on the alleged nullity or inapplicability on a prima facie basis.26 Challenging an arbitration clause would be even more difficult in international arbitration where arbitration agreements are, pursuant to established case law, presumed to be valid (principe de validité).

Still, State judges have denied the jurisdiction of an arbitral tribunal where the party challenging the jurisdiction of the State judge could not prove the very existence of the arbitration clause27 or where a dispute was manifestly outside the scope of the contract containing the arbitration agreement28.

Where it is not established that the arbitration agreement is “manifestly null” or “manifestly inapplicable”, French courts will systematically decline their jurisdiction and allow the arbitral tribunal to rule on its own jurisdiction.29 However, a party who wants to rely on an arbitration agreement must raise before the State court a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction as the court cannot decline its jurisdiction on its own initiative (Article 1448 CCP). Such motion to dismiss must be brought before any defence on the merits.30

Please note that, in a recent ruling, the Cour de cassation decided that the provisions of the EU law protecting consumers against unfair terms prevail over the “kompetenz-kompetenz” principle. The Cour thus discarded an arbitration clause contained in an international contract concluded between a professional and a consumer as it considered such clause as unfair (for more details see para. 2.6.2. above)31.

3.2 Anti-suit injunctions

The concept of anti-suit injunctions does not exist under French law. As such, French judges do not grant injunctions preventing the parties from commencing or continuing State court proceedings if an arbitration is under way.

The question also arose as to whether an anti-suit injunction granted abroad could produce effects in France. In a decision rendered on 14 October 2009, the Cour de cassation acknowledged that anti-suit injunctions ordered in the United States were not contrary to public-policy substantive provisions of French Law and thus refused to annul an arbitral award on such ground.32

3.3 State-court intervention in arbitrations seated outside of the jurisdiction

Pursuant to Article 1505 CCP applicable to international arbitration, a party to an international ad hoc arbitration faced with difficulties related to arbitral proceedings may also resort to the French juge d'appui even if such proceedings are seated outside of his jurisdiction provided that (i) the parties chose to have their arbitration agreement governed by French procedural law or (ii) the parties expressly gave jurisdiction to the French State courts for disputes related to the arbitral procedure or (iii) one of the parties incurs the risk of a denial of justice. With respect to the risk of a denial of justice, the Cour de cassation decided that the French juge d'appui had jurisdiction to appoint a member of the arbitral tribunal where one of the parties refused to do so as such situation led to the blockage of the arbitration proceedings.33

In a recent decision rendered on 16 April 2021, the Paris First-Instance Court reminded that the French juge d'appui did not have jurisdiction to intervene with respect to an arbitration seated outside France where no risk of denial of justice was established.34

4. The conduct of the proceedings

4.1 Legal counsel

French law does not require the parties to an arbitration to be represented by legal counsel. If they wish so, parties may choose to be represented by French or foreign lawyers or non-lawyers.

4.2 Independence of the arbitrators

Pursuant to Article 1456 CCP, applicable to both domestic and international arbitration, an arbitrator has a duty to disclose all "circumstances which may affect its independence or impartiality" before it accepts its appointment. Article 1456 CCP provides that such duty does not end with the appointment but also applies if any such circumstance arises in the course of arbitral proceedings.

Once an arbitrator has been appointed, any challenge to this arbitrator has to be addressed to the arbitral institution or, in case of an ad hoc arbitration, to the French juge d'appui. In the latter case, parties are subject to a one-month limitation period to bring the challenge proceedings before the judge, which is triggered from the moment a party has effective knowledge of the ground for challenge. A party that fails to challenge a conflicted arbitrator within this time limit (or in the case of institutional arbitration, the timeframe set by the arbitration rules) will be deemed to have waived its right to challenge the arbitrator and will be barred from seeking annulment of the award on the same ground.35 This is notably the case when the information that the party relies on to challenge the arbitrator was publicly accessible and could have been obtained before the expiry of the timeframe set by institutional rules.36

The scope of the arbitrators’ duty to disclose has been clarified by case law. It has been held, for example, that arbitrators have a duty to disclose the fact that they have been regularly and systematically appointed by the same party over a long period of time, thus creating a “flow of business.”.37 It was held that an arbitrator had a duty to disclose the fact that other lawyers from his firm were advising the parent company of one of the parties when the arbitral proceedings were on-going.38 However, it has been held that the fact that an arbitrator attended a symposium in which one of the parties took part,39 or the political opinions of an arbitrator do not constitute circumstances which need to be disclosed. Arbitrators are in a general manner dispensed from disclosing circumstances deemed notorious.41 A French court will only annul an award if it

4.3 Court intervention for the constitution of the tribunal

As regards international arbitration, Article 1508 CCP provides that the parties to an arbitration can either (i) expressly appoint the arbitrators in their arbitration agreement, or (ii) provide for a procedure of appointment either expressly or by way of reference to arbitration rules. If the arbitration procedure is silent on this matter or should the parties choose the French procedural law to apply, the arbitral tribunal will be appointed in accordance with Articles 1452 et seq. CCP.

Pursuant to Article 1452 CCP, applicable to both domestic and international arbitration, any difficulties in the appointment of the tribunal should be referred to the arbitral institution chosen by the parties in the arbitration agreement.

When the parties have agreed to an \textit{ad hoc} arbitration seated in France, and unless otherwise provided by the parties, any difficulty in the appointment of the arbitral tribunal can be referred to a dedicated judge supervising arbitration proceedings (\textit{juge d'appui}). In domestic arbitration, under Article 1459 CCP, the \textit{juge d'appui} is the President of the First-Instance Court (\textit{Président du Tribunal judiciaire}\footnote{Formerly \textit{Tribunal de grande instance}.}), which has territorial jurisdiction over the place where the arbitral tribunal is seated (or the President of the Commercial Court were expressly provided by the parties). In international arbitration, pursuant to Article 1505 CCP, the \textit{juge d'appui} is always the President of the Paris First-Instance Court (\textit{Président du Tribunal judiciaire de Paris}).

As stated in paragraph 3.3 above, Article 1505 CCP provides that a party to an international \textit{ad hoc} arbitration faced with difficulties related to the constitution of the arbitral tribunal may also resort to the \textit{juge d'appui} when the arbitration is seated outside France provided that (i) parties chose to have their arbitration agreement governed by French procedural law or (ii) the parties expressly gave jurisdiction to the French State courts for disputes related to the arbitral procedure or (iii) one of the parties incurs the risk of a denial of justice. This last criterion concerns situations where the obstacle experienced by a party in the appointment of the tribunal can be referred to no other State court or arbitral institution throughout the world.\footnote{Cour de cassation, 1\textsuperscript{ère} Division, 1 Forrest 2005, n°02-15.237.}

Article 1460 CCP applicable to both domestic and international arbitration provides that the decisions of the \textit{juge d'appui} have \textit{res judicata} effect and may only be appealed when the \textit{juge d'appui} refuses to appoint an arbitrator on the ground that an arbitration agreement is manifestly null or manifestly inapplicable.

Pursuant to Article 1452 CCP applicable to both domestic and international arbitration, the \textit{juge d'appui} may intervene to appoint a sole arbitrator in cases where the parties fail to agree on one. When the parties agreed to a three-person tribunal, the \textit{juge d'appui} may intervene to resolve situations where one party refuses to appoint its arbitrator, or when the two arbitrators appointed by the parties fail to agree on a third one.

According to Article 1454 CCP equally applicable to both domestic and international arbitration, apart from assisting the parties in the constitution of the arbitral tribunal, any other difficulty regarding the performance of the arbitration agreement can be referred to the \textit{juge d'appui} as a last resort. The \textit{juge d'appui} may thus rule on disputes related to pathological clauses or regarding the removal of an arbitrator (Article 1458 CCP).

In the aforementioned recent decision of 16 April 2021, the Paris First-Instance Court reminded that in case of an international arbitration governed by institutional rules, the role of the \textit{juge d'appui} is not to replace the arbitral institution that is responsible itself for deciding procedural issues arising from the application of its rules and that the only event in which the \textit{juge d'appui} can intervene is when the institution fails to act and such failure hinders the constitution of the arbitral tribunal. Based on this general principle, the Court held that the juge d'appui had no jurisdiction to hear a dispute arising from the decision taken by the arbitral institution that, on a prima facie basis, there was no arbitration clause applicable to 9 out of 11 defendants designated by claimant and that the arbitration proceedings should thus only proceed with respect to the remaining 2 defendants, as there was no evidence of any failure of the arbitral institution that could hinder the constitution of the arbitral tribunal.45

4.4 Interim measures granted by State courts including ex parte measures

In both domestic and international arbitration, the existence of an arbitration clause does not prevent State courts from ordering interim measures as long as the arbitral tribunal has not been constituted. Indeed, pursuant to Article 1449 CCP (applicable to both domestic and international arbitration), ex parte interim measures may be ordered by State courts even in presence of an arbitration agreement in order to (i) gather evidence on an ex-parte or adversarial basis under Article 145 CCP, which requires that the application be based on a legitimate ground and made before any action on the merits, or (ii) grant conservatory measures in case of urgency.

Once the tribunal has been constituted, the State courts have no more jurisdiction to order any urgent interim measures. Indeed, unless otherwise provided by the parties, Article 1468 CCP, applicable to both domestic and international arbitration, grants the arbitral tribunal general jurisdiction to order interim or provisional measures, with the penalties it may deem necessary. However, provisional seizures (saisies conservatoires) and the registration of a judicial mortgage (sûretés judiciaires) can only be ordered by French State courts, which have exclusive jurisdiction to order such measures, and can be requested by a party at any stage of the arbitral proceedings.

4.5 The proceedings

The parties have generally discretion to organise the arbitral proceedings. However, some provisions of the French arbitration law set certain basic limits on the conduct of the proceedings. As a general rule, parties to domestic and international arbitration should act with promptness and loyalty in the proceedings (Article 1464 CCP). In addition, Article 1510 CCP applicable to international arbitration specifically provides that irrespective of the procedural rules chosen by the parties, the arbitral tribunal must grant them equal treatment and due process. As in many other jurisdictions, the lack of such procedural guarantees is one of the possible grounds for the annulment of the award in both domestic and international arbitration.

4.5.1 Confidentiality

While French arbitration law specifically provides for the confidentiality of domestic arbitration proceedings unless otherwise agreed by the parties (Article 1464 CCP), no similar rule applies to international arbitration. Indeed, a French court required from a party to an international arbitration to demonstrate the very existence of a confidentiality obligation, which shows that the confidentiality should not be taken for granted.46 As such, parties to international arbitrations seated in France wishing to ensure confidentiality of their proceedings should include relevant provisions in their agreement, either by way of an express provision, or through the choice of appropriate arbitration rules.

4.5.2 Length of arbitration proceedings

As regards domestic arbitration, Article 1463 CCP provides that in the absence of any timeframe specified in the arbitration agreement, the arbitral tribunal shall cease its mission after 6 months from its constitution. Such time limit for rendering an award can be extended by the agreement of the parties or, failing such agreement, by the juge d'appui. The Paris Court of Appeal recently ruled that parties' agreement to extend the time limit specified in the terms of reference can be inferred from their manifest intention to participate in the arbitral proceedings after its expiry\textsuperscript{47}.

The French arbitration law does not set any time limit for rendering an award in international arbitration.

\subsection*{4.5.3 Hearings and meetings}

The parties have full discretion to determine if the hearings will actually take place and if so, the place of such hearings. Meetings, hearings and even deliberations of the arbitral tribunal can take place outside of the seat of the arbitration.\textsuperscript{48} Furthermore, French law does not contain any provision prohibiting that the meetings and/or the hearings be held remotely. Should a party object to a remote meeting and/or hearing, it appears from the French law perspective that the arbitral tribunal can still order that such meeting and/or hearing be held remotely if such decision does not violate any essential procedural right of the objecting party (such as the right to present defence, the right to adversarial proceedings, equality of the parties). With respect to a similar question, the Paris Court of Appeal decided that the fact that witnesses had been heard through an audio conference instead of a video conference due to technical problems did not violate the principle of adversarial proceedings, especially because no party raised any objection in this regard at the time of the hearing.\textsuperscript{49}

\subsection*{4.5.4 Interim measures granted by arbitrators}

Once the arbitral tribunal has been constituted, Article 1468 CCP, applicable to both domestic and international arbitration, grants the arbitral tribunal general jurisdiction to order interim or provisional measures. However, provisional seizures (saisies conservatoires) and the registration of a judicial mortgage (sûretés judiciaires) can only be ordered by French State courts, which have exclusive jurisdiction in this matter (see para. 4.4. above).

\subsection*{4.5.5 Evidence and testimonies}

Pursuant to Article 1467 CCP, applicable to both domestic and international arbitration, the arbitral tribunal may order all the measures it deems necessary to collect evidence. The arbitrators can order a party to disclose a document but the parties, in international arbitration, can agree otherwise. With regards to witnesses, Article 1467 CCP provides that an arbitral tribunal may hear witness evidence from any person, without the need for the witness to take an oath. French arbitration law has no further provisions regarding any restriction on witness evidence. Case law on this matter authorizes parties to an international arbitration to hear witnesses as witnesses.\textsuperscript{50} A question has been raised as to whether French lawyers were breaching their professional rules of conduct by preparing witnesses prior to their hearing. Through a resolution adopted on 26 February 2008, the Paris Bar Council clarified its position by stating that preparation of witnesses in the context of international arbitral proceedings does not breach any principle of professional conduct of French lawyers. The resolution does not address the point whether preparing witnesses by French lawyers in the context of domestic arbitral proceedings would constitute any breach of the professional code of conduct.

\subsection*{4.5.6 Existence of a duty to hold hearings}

There is no requirement under the French rules applicable to domestic or international arbitration to hold hearings. For the sake of efficiency, arbitrations with a small amount in dispute are often conducted without holding hearings. However, in both domestic and international arbitration, arbitrators have a general duty to ensure that the equality of the parties and due process are respected as the non-respect of basic procedural guarantees can be a reason for annulment of the award. The parties must thus be given a reasonable opportunity to present their arguments. As such, should the arbitral tribunal wish to decide the case without holding a hearing, it should ensure that such decision would not infringe the procedural rights of any of the parties. The same analysis should be adopted in cases where the arbitral tribunal would like to hold the hearing remotely.

4.5.7 Principles on the awarding of interest

Arbitrators may award interest on any monetary claim, which will be added to the principal upon enforcement in France. Furthermore, pursuant to Article 1231-7 of the French Civil Code and established case law, interest at the French statutory rate will automatically apply and be added to the principal when the enforcement of an international award is sought in France, unless moratory interest has already been granted under the award.

4.5.8 Principles on the allocation of arbitration costs

Arbitrators have wide discretion to order the parties to pay arbitration costs partially or in full.

It is a general rule under Article 700 CCP that the unsuccessful party should be condemned to pay the winning party its legal costs. Yet, the unsuccessful party is not automatically bound to bear the entirety of its opponent's fees and costs as the judge has full discretion to determine their amount. The judge can also decide not to apply Article 700 CCP at all based on the equity considerations and thus not to grant any costs to the winning party. Indeed, pursuant to Article 700 CCP, the judge shall base its decision on equity and financial situation of the succumbing party. This provision is not directly applicable to arbitral proceedings but arbitrators may take it into account while deciding on costs, especially if the arbitration is seated in France. Please, however, note that Article 700 CCP will be applicable in case of arbitration-related State court proceedings such as annulment proceedings or challenges against exequatur orders. The general practice of French courts is to limit the amount of recoverable legal fees (which are often below the amount claimed or the amount of the costs effectively incurred). However, in case of annulment proceedings, the recoverable legal fees often correspond to the real amount of legal fees spent by the winning party.

4.6 Arbitrators' liability

4.6.1 Immunity from arbitrators' civil liability

Arbitrators benefit from wide immunity from civil liability for matters strictly related to the fulfilment of their mission and the award they render. As such, arbitrators' liability is generally excluded where an award contains a simple error or where it is considered not to be fair. However, such immunity is not absolute and arbitrators can be held liable in case of fraudulent misrepresentation, gross negligence or denial of justice. In domestic arbitration, absent an agreement of the parties on the time limit to render the award, an arbitrator can be held liable if he or she fails to render the award within the default 6-month time limit set forth in Article 1463 CCP without having sought an extension of this time-limit from the "juge d'appel" where the parties had neither agreed upon such extension, nor requested for one and if the award has been annulled as a result of this failure. In addition, by accepting their appointment, arbitrators conclude a contract with the parties and can therefore be held liable for its defective performance. Indeed, arbitrators have been held liable for breaching said "contrat d'arbitre" in a case where they failed to render an award within the agreed timeframe or to disclose a relevant circumstance regarding their impartiality.

Two recent decisions rendered by the Paris First-Instance Court raised the question of jurisdiction over disputes regarding arbitrator's civil liability. In its decision of 16 April 2021, the Court stated that arbitrator's duty to reveal any circumstance that could affect its independence and/or impartiality arises from the relationship between the arbitrator and the parties (and not from the agreement between the arbitral institution and the parties) and that such action should be brought before a court that has jurisdiction to hear a contractual liability dispute against the arbitrator. In another decision rendered on 31 March 2021, the Court decided that EU Regulation No 1215/2012 (the so-called Brussels I Bis Regulation) was applicable to a contractual liability action against an arbitrator and that the appropriate court to hear the dispute is the one located in the place where the arbitrator effectively performed his “intellectual services” in the scope of his arbitrator's appointment. In that case, the Court considered that even though the arbitration was seated in Paris, the arbitrator performed his “intellectual services” in Germany as the hearing and the deliberations between the members of the arbitral tribunal occurred in Germany.

However, by a ruling of 22 June 2021, the Paris Court of Appeals reversed the decision of the Paris First-Instance Court dated 31 March 2021 by stating that (i) EU Regulation No 1215/2012 does not apply to a liability claim against an arbitrator as such action is expressly excluded from its scope under the exception provided under Article 1(2)(d) and that, as a general rule, (ii) the tribunal that has jurisdiction to hear a liability claim against an arbitrator is the one of the seat of the arbitration.

This ruling, which can be further challenged before the Cour de cassation, also contradicts the decision of the Paris First-Instance Court of 16 April 2021 and it will be interesting to see the position that will be adopted by French courts with respect to this question in future.

4.6.2 Criminal liability of arbitrators

Arbitrators may also be held criminally liable for actions they have committed in the course of arbitration proceedings, provided that they qualify as criminal offenses pursuant to French criminal law. In particular, several articles of the French Criminal Code expressly refer to arbitrators, namely Articles 435-7 and 435-9, which both relate to corruption. An arbitrator may also be held criminally liable if he contributes to a money laundering scheme by way of an arbitral award.

5. The award

5.1 Possibility to waive the requirement for an award to provide reasons

In both domestic and international arbitration, the arbitral award has to provide for a minimum of reasons supporting the decision rendered (Article 1482 CCP) as this requirement is considered as an element of a due process and a part of arbitrator's mission.

The only difference between domestic and international arbitration is that in domestic proceedings this provision is mandatory, which means that the parties cannot waive this requirement. As such, the lack of reasons is one of the grounds for annulment of a domestic award (Article 1492 CCP). Accordingly, an award which does not provide the reasoning of the arbitrators can be annulled even when the lack of reasoning causes no harm to the other party. In international arbitration, the parties can waive the requirement for an award to provide reasons (Article 1506 CCP). The lack of reasons is not a ground for annulment of the award under Article 1520 CCP.

5.2 Possibility to waive the right to seek the annulment of the award

The waiver is not possible in domestic arbitration. Article 1491 CCP provides that any provision to the contrary is deemed null and void. In international arbitration, Article 1522 CCP specifically provides that parties to an international arbitration may waive their right to seek annulment of the award at any moment. According to

However, parties which have waived their rights to challenge the award will still be able, pursuant to Article 1522 CCP, to appeal any enforcement order granted by the French judge (\textit{exequatur}).

5.3 Atypical mandatory requirements to the rendering of a valid award at a seat in the jurisdiction?

Under Article 1481 CCP, applicable to both domestic and international arbitration, the arbitral award rendered in France shall mention (i) the names, first names or corporate name of the parties, as well as the address of their residency or headquarters; (ii) the name(s) of the legal counsel as well as all other person having represented or assisted the parties; (iii) the name(s) of the arbitrators; (iv) the date of the award; (v) the seat of arbitration. In addition, Article 1482 CCP provides that the award must at the minimum briefly state the parties' claims and counterclaims and their legal grounds as well as the reasons for the award. In international arbitration, the parties may waive the application of Articles 1481 and 1482 in their arbitration agreement whereas they are mandatory in domestic arbitration.

In domestic arbitration, Article 1480 CCP provides in addition that the award rendered in France in domestic arbitration must be signed by the arbitrators. The same requirement applies to international arbitrations under Article 1513 CCP.

Pursuant to Article 1520 CCP, an arbitral award rendered in France in international arbitration can only be set aside if (i) the tribunal did not have jurisdiction to hear the dispute, (ii) the tribunal was not regularly constituted, (iii) the tribunal exceeded its authority, (iv) the principle of due process was not respected or (v) the award is contrary to the French definition of international public policy. Pursuant to Articles 1520 and 1525 CCP, an order granting \textit{exequatur} to a foreign award or an award rendered in France in international arbitration can only be challenged on the same grounds.

In domestic arbitration, there are additional grounds for annulment. As such, an award rendered in France in domestic arbitration may also be set aside if it does not state (i) reasons, (ii) date, (iii) names of the arbitrators, but also when (iv) it is not signed or (v) it was not rendered by at least a majority of arbitrators. As regards more specifically the date of the award, it was recently held that the fact that the award mentioned two different dates should be interpreted as a clerical error and cannot be a reason for its annulment.\textsuperscript{62} It was reminded in the same decision that the State judge cannot control the relevance of the reasoning adopted by the arbitral tribunal but only its existence.

5.4 Possibility to appeal the award

In domestic arbitration, Article 1489 CCP provides that the award shall not be subject to appeal unless the parties agreed otherwise. The appeal allows the State judge to rule once again on the entirety of the case that was submitted to the arbitral tribunal both on law and facts. When the parties agreed to the appeal, the parties cannot initiate parallel annulment proceedings relating to the same award (Article 1491 CCP). In international arbitration, the award cannot be appealed but it can be, nevertheless, annulled through setting aside proceedings.

5.5 Recognition and enforcement of domestic and foreign awards

French awards rendered in domestic arbitration, foreign awards rendered in international arbitration and awards rendered in France in international arbitration must be first recognized as effective in the French legal order in order to be enforced. They become effective when they are granted enforcement through an order called “\textit{exequatur}”. Once such order is granted, they are enforceable in the French territory. The proceedings are \textit{ex parte} and the application for \textit{exequatur} must be filed with the registry of the adequate First-Instance Court (\textit{Tribunal judiciaire}). In domestic arbitration, the application must be filed with the First-Instance Court that has territorial jurisdiction over the seat of the arbitration (Article 1487 CCP). In international arbitration, the application must necessarily be filed with the Paris First-Instance Court (Article 1516 CCP).

The exequatur will be granted if the two following conditions are met on a prima facie basis:

(i) the existence of the award is established by production of the original copy of the award (a certified copy is allowed for international awards) and the original copy of the underlying arbitration agreement (Article 1487 applicable to domestic arbitration and Articles 1514 and 1515 CCP applicable to international arbitration) or copies of such documents complying with the requirements necessary for their authenticity. If the award and/or the arbitration agreement is not in French, it must be translated into French and the court may request a certified translation (Article 1515 CCP);

(ii) the recognition or enforcement of the award is not manifestly contrary to the French definition of international public policy (Article 1488 CCP applicable to domestic arbitration and Article 1514 CCP applicable to international arbitration).

Exequatur proceedings are rather fast and an exequatur order for a foreign award is normally granted within a month from the application. The decisions refusing to grant the exequatur are rare. However, should the judge refuse the exequatur, the decision can be appealed within one month from its service. The appeal is possible in both domestic (Article 1500 CCP) and international arbitration, no matter if the award was rendered in France (Article 1523 CCP) or abroad (Article 1525 CCP). Pursuant to Article 1524 CCP, if a debtor of an award rendered in France in international arbitration brings setting aside proceedings, the order that granted exequatur of such award is automatically challenged, too.

An order granting the exequatur can only be appealed if it concerns a foreign award in an international arbitration, as the annulment proceedings cannot be brought against such awards (Article 1525 CCP). In case of appeal against the order granting exequatur, the Court of Appeal will rule on the same grounds as those which are applicable to setting aside proceedings (Article 1520 CCP). As regards awards rendered in France in an international arbitration, an appeal is only possible when the parties have waived their rights to ask for the setting aside of the award, which is extremely rare (Articles 1522 and 1524 CCP). In domestic arbitration, an appeal against the order granting the exequatur is not possible but an appeal or annulment proceedings against the award rendered in France will automatically result in challenging the exequatur order (1499 CCP). Should the request for annulment be dismissed, the exequatur order will be automatically confirmed.

5.6 Suspension of the enforcement in case of annulment or appeal proceedings

Pursuant to Article 1526 CCP, applicable to awards rendered in France or abroad in an international arbitration, the enforcement measures are not suspended when the setting aside proceedings are lodged or an appeal is introduced against an exequatur order. The second paragraph of Article 1526 CCP provides for an exception to this general rule and allows an award debtor to apply to the First President of the Court of Appeal (or the Judge in charge of the case management of the annulment proceedings as the case may be – “conseiller de la mise en état”) for suspending or setting conditions for enforcement of the award if the rights of any of the parties to the arbitration could be severely prejudiced by such an automatic enforcement. The courts construe this condition very narrowly and a stay of enforcement is granted only in exceptional circumstances.

In domestic arbitration, enforcement is only possible after the expiry of the one-month time limit to lodge the appeal or the setting aside proceedings. If such proceedings are brought, the enforcement is further suspended unless the arbitrators decided that the award be granted immediate provisional enforcement (Article 1496 CCP). Parties can apply to the First President of the Court of Appeal (or the conseiller de la mise en état) for granting the award immediate enforcement or suspending it if such an immediate enforcement was granted by the arbitral tribunal (Article 1497 CCP).
5.7 Enforcement of an award annulled at the seat of the arbitration

French courts are extremely favourable to the recognition of foreign awards as they consider that a foreign award, which was annulled at the seat of arbitration, may still be enforced in France, provided that such enforcement is not contrary to the French definition of international public policy. This rule was first recognised in the OTV v Hilmarton case and confirmed in the Putrabali case. Both rulings considered that an international arbitral award was independent from any national legal system and held that its validity should only be assessed with regards to the rules applicable within the country where enforcement is sought. As a recent illustration, the former shareholders of the Russian company Yukos could carry on the enforcement of their awards in France in spite of the annulment decision rendered by the first-instance judge at the seat of the arbitration in April 2016 (the Hague).

5.8 Are foreign awards readily enforceable in practice?

As stated before, foreign awards must be granted an exequatur order of the French judge in order to be enforced. However, this procedure is fast and the judge does not conduct any in-depth analysis of the award. Once an award is granted the exequatur, it is considered a valid enforcement title under Article L. 113-3 of the Code of Civil Enforcement Proceedings and the award creditor can carry out various enforcement measures such as seizures and/or attachments or liens.

5.9 Additional point: general rules on the annulment proceedings

Annulment proceedings can only be initiated against an award which was rendered in France, be it in domestic (Article 1494 CCP) or international (Article 1519 CCP) arbitration. It has to be initiated within a month of the date where a party is officially served with the award, and presented to the adequate Court of Appeal, which has jurisdiction over the seat of arbitration. The aforementioned one-month period is extended for two months if the party bringing the annulment proceedings is not established in France (Article 643 CCP).

As regards the awards rendered in France in international arbitral proceedings, the annulment of the award can only be obtained on one of the following five grounds listed by Article 1520 CCP: (i) the arbitral tribunal wrongly declined or confirmed its jurisdiction; (ii) the tribunal was irregularly appointed; (iii) the tribunal exceeded or did not conform to the authority granted by the parties; (iv) due process was violated or (v) the award is contrary to the French definition of international public policy.

The legal standard for setting aside the award is high, yet awards were recently annulled in cases where it was found that they manifestly violated the international public order, in a variety of circumstances. Notably, awards were set aside by the French courts in cases of corruption (Indagro case, September 2017 and Alstom Transport, April 2018 and May 2019), money laundering (Belokon case, February 2017), or violation of foreign public policy rules (MK Group, January 2018). In order to assess whether or not the awards should be set aside on the ground of international public order, judges now tend to perform a more intense factual and legal investigation of the facts and allegations at stake, notably with respect to the cases that might have involved corruption.

In domestic arbitration, in addition to the five aforementioned grounds applicable to awards rendered in international arbitration, an award can also be annulled, pursuant to Article 1492 CCP, if the award does not state the (i) reasons, (ii) date, (iii) names of the arbitrators, but also when (iv) it is not signed or (v) it was not rendered by the majority of arbitrators.

In international arbitration where one party is a French State entity, the French Tribunal of Conflicts, which is a dedicated tribunal to rule over jurisdiction conflicts between civil and administrative courts, held that as a default rule, the annulment and enforcement proceedings against the award fall under the jurisdiction of the French civil courts. However, the administrative courts retain their jurisdiction if three cumulative conditions are met: (i) the agreement containing the arbitration clause was performed in the French territory, (ii) the award was rendered in France and (iii) the award involves the issue of compliance with public policy rules of French public law relating to public property occupancy, public procurement, to public partnerships or to the delegation of public services.\(^71\)

The annulment proceedings against awards rendered in international arbitrations seated in Paris used to be heard before the 1st Chamber of the 1st Civil Section of the Paris Court of Appeal. However, the Paris Court of Appeal created in April 2018 “the International Chamber” specifically dedicated to disputes relating to international commercial contracts including annulment proceedings. In the scope of their proceedings before the International Chamber, parties may agree on the application of the “Protocol relating to procedural rules applicable to the International Chamber of the Court of Appeal of Paris” signed between the Paris Court of Appeal and the Paris Bar Association on 7 February 2018\(^72\). Its application enables the parties to produce submissions and exhibits in English and use English for testimonial evidence. Parties’ counsel who are admitted to the Paris Bar can also plead in English. Finally, the Protocol encourages the use of witnesses’ examination and reminds the relevant provisions of the CCP in this regard.

5.10 Additional point: other available challenges of the award

In both domestic and international arbitration, a party may seek, pursuant to Article 1502 CCP, the review of an award on the basis of the recours en révision. This is an exceptional procedure which seeks to review the merits of the case when one of the parties discovers after the rendering of the award that (i) the arbitral tribunal was misled by fraud, or (ii) that the other party produced forged witness statements or documents, or (iii) that such party retained some key documents. In domestic arbitration, such challenge shall be brought before the arbitral tribunal or before the relevant Court of Appeal if the tribunal cannot be reunited. In international arbitration, it can only be brought before the arbitral tribunal.

5.11 Additional point: enforcement against State assets

Further to numerous seizures performed in France on assets that appeared to belong to the Russian Federation in the scope of enforcement of the awards rendered in the Yukos case, France amended its rules applicable to enforcement against State assets.

Indeed, Law n°2016-1691 dated 9 December 2016 on transparency, anti-corruption measures and modernisation of economy (the so-called “Sapin II Act”) extended sovereign immunity of States facing provisional attachments or enforcement measures. As a consequence, a party that seeks provisional or enforcement measures against State assets must obtain, on an ex parte basis, a prior authorisation from a judge.\(^73\) Such authorisation will only be granted if one of the following alternative conditions is met: (i) the State concerned has expressly consented to the application of the measure in question, (ii) the State reserved or affected the asset concerned by the enforcement measures sought to the satisfaction of the claim which is the purpose of the proceedings or (iii) if the asset in question is specifically in use or intended to be used by the State concerned for purposes unrelated to non-commercial public service and is linked to the entity against which the proceedings are initiated.\(^{74}\)

Moreover, the immunity of diplomatic property was reinforced as a (i) special and (ii) express waiver is now required to implement an enforcement measures against such property.\(^{75}\) This amendment directly overruled the Cour de cassation's decision of 13 May 2015 where the Court held that the waiver only needs to be express. Further to adoption of the Sapin II Act, the Cour de cassation recently overturned its own decision rendered in 2015 to admit that the waiver must be both express and special.\(^{76}\)

6. Funding arrangements

6.1 Contingency or alternative fee arrangements

Under French ethic rules applicable to French lawyers, fee arrangements solely based on success fees are prohibited (the so-called “\textit{quota litis} pacts”).\(^{77}\) However, the Paris Court of Appeal held that such contingency fee arrangements are valid in the context of an international arbitration, as they are not contrary to the French definition of international public policy.\(^{78}\) The National Council of the French Bars recently published a status report reflecting on the evolution of the \textit{quota litis} pact and the possible lifting of its prohibition.\(^{79}\)

6.2 Third-party funding arrangements

Third-party funding is not prohibited under French law and it has recently gained importance in France. However, there are no specific legal provisions or case law regarding this issue. While ruling on an award rendered in an arbitration funded by a third party, the Versailles Court of Appeal did not address the question of the validity of such arrangement.\(^{80}\) On 21 February 2017, the Paris Bar Council adopted a resolution confirming that the use of third-party funding in international arbitration is a positive development for access to justice and does not contravene French Law.\(^{81}\) Disclosure of the third-party funding is recommended but not compulsory. The resolution of 21 February 2017 states that legal counsel should encourage their clients to disclose the existence of any third-party funding arrangement.

However, any legal counsel of a party using a third-party funding still has to abide by its professional rules of conduct. This means in practice that legal counsel have to uphold their obligation of confidentiality towards their clients and will be barred from communicating privileged information directly to the third party funder. This also means that a legal counsel cannot place the interests of the third-party funder over those of its clients, and can only receive instructions from the latter.

7. Arbitration and technology

Surprisingly, it appears that the question of the interplay between arbitration and blockchain under French law has not been discussed much by the French legal doctrine so far. Likewise, to the best of our knowledge, no French judge has been confronted so far with the specific issue of the validity of a blockchain-based evidence and/or of an arbitration agreement or an arbitration award registered by a blockchain system.

7.1 Blockchain and evidence

There is no specific provision under French law regarding the validity of blockchain-based evidence. Indeed, in an answer to the Parliamentary Question No 22103 dated 10 December 2019, the French legislator seems to consider that there is no need to create a new specific category of evidence as the legality of blockchain-based evidence can be assessed by French judges by considering the existing general rules of evidence.\(^\text{82}\)

In this respect, the principle under Article L. 110-3 of the Commercial Code is that all types of evidence are admissible to establish the existence of obligations between professional parties (“commerçants”). More generally, this principle is also widely recognized in all civil matters. As such, a blockchain-based evidence can thus be submitted to the judge in the same way as any other type of evidence.

Article 1366 of the Civil Code specifies that an electronic document has the same probative value as a paper document and Article 1367 provides for the possibility of an electronic signature. However, the electronic signature is only valid if it had been created through a reliable identification process. The reliability of such process is presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, when (i) the electronic signature is created, (ii) the identity of the signatory is assured and (iii) the integrity of the act guaranteed. As such, a person who would like to rely on a blockchain-based evidence in order to prove the existence of a legal act would need to establish that the blockchain system used to register the act complied with the requirements of a valid electronic signature. In this regard, it appears that given the specificity of the blockchain technology, the identity of the signatory of the document could be difficult to establish.\(^\text{83}\)

7.2 Validity of arbitration agreement or award and blockchain

As regards the validity of arbitration agreements, French law does not require, with respect to international arbitration, that such agreement be in writing whereas such requirement exists with respect to domestic arbitration. It thus seems that as long as a party can prove the existence of an arbitration agreement, be it through blockchain-based evidence, its existence is likely to be recognised in case of an international arbitration. With respect to domestic arbitration, the French judge is likely to analyse whether the use of blockchain can amount to a “writing”. In this regard, Article 1174 of the Civil Code provides that where a “writing” is required, such writing can be established and preserved in an electronic format as long as it complies with requirements set out under Articles 1366 and 1367 of the Civil Code.

As regards the validity of awards, Article 1480 CCP (applicable to domestic arbitration) and Article 1513 CCP (applicable to international arbitration) both require that the award be signed by the arbitrators. In order to ensure that the use of a blockchain system constitutes a valid signature under French law, a local judge would have to analyse if such system complies with the conditions set forth under Article 1367 of the Civil Code and described above (para. 7.1.).

7.3 Blockchain and enforcement of the award

Article 1515 CCP is less stringent than Article IV of the New York Convention as it does not require production of the “duly authenticated” original copy of the award for the purposes of recognition and enforcement. Applicant needs to merely submit the original copies of (i) the award and (ii) the arbitration agreement or their copies that comply with the conditions required to establish their authenticity.

In theory, given that Article 1515 CCP does not require a “duly authenticated” original copy of the award and the arbitration agreement, the acknowledgment of the existence of an award and/or an arbitration agreement for the purposes of the enforcement and/or recognition of the award appears to be possible as long as the applicant proves that the submitted documents are indeed originals. However, in practice, it can be feared that the court clerks and/or the judge in charge of deciding on the exequatur order be reluctant to accept blockchain-based awards and/or arbitration agreements.

7.4 Would a court consider an award that has been electronically signed (by inserting the image of a signature) or more securely digitally signed (by using encrypted electronic keys authenticated by a third-party certificate) as an original for the purposes of recognition and enforcement?

As regards the validity of an award rendered in France that would be electronically signed, such signature would only be considered as valid if the requirements set forth under Article 1367 are complied with. It notably implies that the signature be verified through a reliable identification process. As such, an award signed by inserting the image of a signature would very likely not be considered as valid under French law unless it is proven that such signature has been verified through a reliable identification process.

As regards the enforcement of an electronically signed award, French law only requires that the originals of the award and the arbitration agreement (or copies complying with requirements necessary for their authenticity) be submitted to the judge. As such, French law does not require any specific form of the award and/or its signature but the applicant would still have to prove that the presented documents are indeed originals. An author observes that this requirement can be difficult to be proven in case of arbitral proceedings conducted entirely electronically where no original hard copy of the award would exist.84

8. Likelihood of future legislative reform

It seems unlikely that there will be any significant reform in French arbitration law in the next couple of years. The most recent change to date occurred in 2016 with the coming into force of the aforementioned Law n°2016-1547 of 18 November 2016 on the Modernization of Justice.

9. Compatibility of the Delos Rules with local arbitration law

Delos Rules (as in force from 14 January 2020) appear to be fully compatible with French arbitration law. Still, in order to reduce the risk of any subsequent difficulties with enforcement and/or validity of the award rendered in an arbitration governed by Delos Rules, the following three points should be raised:

(i) Articles 4(1) and 4(2) of Delos Rules set out time limits for producing Respondent’s “Notice of Defence and Counterclaim” and Claimant’s “Notice of Response to Counterclaim” respectively. Such time limits can be considered as rather short (from 7 to 21 days depending on the complexity of the dispute) and a party could claim that it has not been provided sufficient time to present its defence. In this respect, it is important that DELOS ensures that Article 2(3) providing for the possibility to extend any time-limit set out in Delos Rules is effectively applied in circumstances where a party does need additional time to present its defence.

(ii) Article 7 of Delos Rules provides that the “Tribunal shall take an active role in the resolution of legal and factual issues on the basis of the parties’ submissions”. According to Delos Rules, such wide power implies, among other things, procedural measures such as limiting the length of parties’ written submissions or to render an award with or without holding an oral hearing. While such measures are not per se contrary to French law, the arbitral tribunal must ensure that they would not jeopardise the parties’ key procedural rights (due process, right to be heard, adversarial proceedings).

(iii) Article 10(2) provides that by submitting their dispute to arbitration under Delos Rules, the parties “waive their right to any form of recourse insofar as such waiver can validly be made”. However, it should be stressed that such general waiver will not preclude a party from bringing annulment proceedings against an award rendered in an arbitration under the auspices of Delos Rules seated in Paris. Indeed, even though Article 1522 CCP provides for the possibility for the parties to waive their right to bring annulment proceedings against an award by way of a specific agreement, it has been pointed out by case law that such waiver cannot result from a general provision by which the parties (i) accepted that the award will be definitive and (ii) waived their rights to any challenge. In order to be valid, the waiver must be specific, meaning that it must specifically refer to annulment proceedings ("recours en annulation").

84 T. Clay, Code de l’arbitrage commenté, Article 1515 CCP.
